

NEW HEADLIGHT COVERS AND ATV MAINFRAME REVISION

A new style headlight cover is now in production. The new covers (left/right) have integrated headlamp housing mounting tabs. See below right. The older style headlight covers did not have the integrated mounts; the headlamp housing was mounted to a bracket assembly attached to the main frame. The older style covers have been discontinued and are no longer available. At the same time the new covers entered production, a new ATV mainframe entered production. It uses the new covers and does not have the old bracket assembly. To install the new covers on older ATV frames, the headlamp must be removed from the mounting assembly (see below left) and installed in the cover. The new covers come with the hardware necessary to mount the removed headlamp housing in the cover.

CAUTION:

To install the newer headlight covers on older ATV mainframes (ones with headlight bracket assembly depicted below left), - the original headlight mounting assembly must be reassembled (minus the headlamp housing) and the nut tightened securely. If the assembly is not reassembled, the small tab securing the fender bracket to the frame can break off. The small frame tab of older ATVs is supported by the "triangulation" of the headlight mount assembly. If its not reassembled and tightened securely, the tab can break off.

The frame tab on newer ATV frame is different and does not require the extra support.

Information is subject to change without notice.
